

Product Overview: American Periodicals from the Center for Research Libraries

Through an innovative partnership, ProQuest and the Center for Research Libraries (CRL), a consortium of North American universities, colleges and independent research libraries, is offering full-color, digital access to a broad range of American periodicals.

American Periodicals Series Online

American Periodicals from the Center for Research Libraries contains full text and full-color scans of journal content that can be cross-searched with American Periodicals Series Online, ProQuest Historical Newspapers, and other leading historical collections from ProQuest. Upon completion, American Periodicals from the Center for Research Libraries will contain nearly three million pages.

ProQuest's newest periodicals research collection is a full-text resource that spans the 19th century through the dawn of the 20th century. The collection contains special interest and general magazines, labor and trade publications, scientific and literary journals, and photographic periodicals, as well as other historically significant titles. Key titles include:

- American Annual of Photography
- The Craftsman
- Electrical Age
- Hampton's Magazine
- American Homes and Garden
- Machinery
- The Labor Journal
- The Hub
- Woman's Protest Against Woman Suffrage
- The Etude

Because the database contains digitized images of periodical pages, researchers can see all of the original typography, drawings, graphic elements, and article layouts exactly as they were originally published.

Customers of American Periodicals from the Center for Research Libraries, APS Online and any or all of the ProQuest Historical Newspapers can expand their research coverage by seamlessly searching across 200 years of American magazines and journals and important newspapers of record.
