

ROYAL INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

I am proud to have been a contributor to The Annual Register since 1970 and a member of the Advisory Board representing the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House) since 1973. The formal connection between The Annual Register and Chatham House dates back to 1947 when Ivison S. Macadam, the director general of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, became the book's editor. One of Macadam's innovations was the introduction of the Advisory Board, which continues to support the editor of The Annual Register to this day and which has throughout its existence included an historian, nominated by Chatham House. Like Chatham House, The Annual Register prides itself on its standard of scholarship and breadth of international expertise. Notwithstanding the disparity in age (the Royal Institute of International Affairs is not yet a centenarian), both are integral to furthering an understanding of international relations. Even though I am now retiring from The Annual Register, I trust that both the book and Chatham House will continue to flourish for many years to come. My congratulations to The Annual Register on its 250th anniversary.
